Developing City Districts for Children

According to UNICEF, “Every child has the right to grow up in a place where they are respected, valued and feel safe, where they have access to basic services and can play, learn, grow in a clean and healthy environment where their voice is heard and matters.” Communities are crucial for our development, well-being, and health - not least the children’s. And activity and play are crucial for children’s physical and cognitive development and interaction with others. So, can we develop city districts, from a child’s perspective, and supports communities for all ages, and how can Danish and Chinese companies support each other in this regard?
